Think Local

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.comse

Forty years ago, a young couple lobbed a rock of altruism and hope into the middle of the pond that is Humboldt County. Decades later, the ripples from Joe Abbott and Ann Morrissey's actions in 1977 continue to reverberate, having grown into something beyond their wildest youthful imaginations.

They started small. In this week's cover story, you'll read about how they grew frustrated with the garbage and environmental degradation they were seeing near their Manila home. But where many just saw the kind of sprawling community problem that can inspire hopelessness, they saw an opportunity to make a difference. They started taking trash bags with them on their regular walks and picking up what they could. Then one night they applied for a grant for federal funding, offering a direct response to a pressing need. From that grant application decades ago grew first a small, three-person beach cleaning detail run through the Northcoast Environmental Center, then the NEC's Adopt-a-Beach program, then a statewide beach cleanup day and finally International Coastal Cleanup Day — a global event that sees millions of volunteers across continents band together to rid beaches, rivers and waterways of litter.

It's a remarkable example of the power of a humble, intensely local act of altruism — an example we'd all do well to heed these days.

In the current political and media environment, it's easy to be enveloped by a feeling of helplessness. So many of the world's problems seem so big and insurmountable and ever present. Our news feeds and social media accounts bombard us minute-by-minute with information about partisan gridlock, scandal and controversy. And the truth is, most of us here in Humboldt County have little hope of guiding the outcome of the Russia investigation, determining whether Brett Kavanaugh is granted a lifetime appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court or immigrant children are reunited with their families. We can — and should — write letters and call members of Congress to make our views known, and we should definitely vote in every election, but it's easy to feel disillusioned and helpless.

But in our own homes, streets, neighborhoods and communities, we can do far more.

Our community is filled with examples of people who saw an immediate need and did something about it, only to have a singular act of doing what's right on a small scale blossom into something much larger.

Decades ago local philanthropist Betty Chinn saw a homeless family sleeping in a car and decided to start bringing them food. Today, she runs a homeless day center, a family shelter and a transitional housing community. In 2001, local insurance agent Paul Nicholson's son saw him critically injured after falling off a cement truck. Nicholson learned that his son didn't know what to do in the case of an emergency. Today, Nicholson volunteers his time visiting dozens of classrooms every year to teach thousands of children throughout Humboldt County when and how to call 911. The Vietnam War left Eric Hollenbeck scarred but he's found healing in opening a school for at-risk youth and a program for war veterans.

And for every story like these — and Abbott's — there are scores of people who donate their time to help a neighbor, volunteer in a local classroom or are simply the rock upon which their neighborhood leans amid hard times.

Stories like these are important because they show the vast power each and every one of us has to impact the world around us, if not in Washington, D.C., then next door. They are a good reminder that we should all spend a little less time obsessing about the latest national scandal and a little more talking to our neighbors, volunteering to help and providing a direct response to an immediate need.

Mahatma Gandhi once said, "If we could change ourselves, the tendencies of the world would also change. As a man changes his own nature, so does the attitude of the world change toward him. ... We need not wait to see what others do."

The truth is that for all its wonders, Humboldt County is filled with problems, from littered public spaces to an addiction epidemic that continues to crush lives and crumble families, impacting just about every aspect of local life. We'd all do well to follow Abbott's lead, pick a problem and do something about it.

If we did, there's no telling where the ripples might reach. ●

In Praise of Diverse Views

Editor:

Thank you for printing the letter from Rick Brennan, "Manipulated" on Aug. 30, 2018. I appreciate having an articulate writer with views differing from many of your readers showing up in your paper. It is refreshing.

Thank you.

Minnie Wolf, Eureka

'Vatican City'

Editor:

As a 20-plus-year KHSU volunteer, I have served in various capacities, including as a member of Peter Fretwell's hiring committee ("Static at KHSU," Aug. 30). At no time did Craig Wruck inform the committee we were hiring a "change agent." This is not an unimportant detail for a hiring committee, but one Mr. Wruck did not feel obligated to relate to us. And so it goes. HSU administration does not feel bound to treat us as equal partners. So you get The Village, Lumberjacks football program termination, the Children's Center closure — and the mess at KHSU. HSU sees itself as a Vatican City. The Townies being unworthy of anything but condemnation.

HSU's issue seems to be a manifest unwillingness to admit a mistake. Fretwell was never a good fit for the station. He has made life difficult, not only for KHSU staff and volunteers but for himself. HSU — far from admitting the possibility of an error — has instead decided to circle the wagons.

KHSU has been down this road before. The university has swung wildly between almost total neglect and highly destructive inference. Some readers may recall the set-to over Democracy Now! and the firing of Elizabeth Hans-McCrone. The difference then was the university was able to respond with positivity and sensitively — hiring Patrick Cleary as caretaker GM — and ushering in a long era of harmonious operations. A similar course of action is likely the only thing that will "right the good ship KHSU." Trust will not magically return. Not next week — not next year. If HSU has any interest in regaining that trust, there is going to be some hard work involved.

Matthew Knight, Eureka

Editor:

The NCJ did an excellent job reporting on the mess created by top administrators at Humboldt State University.

I worked and volunteered at KHSU for almost four decades. I have on my desk a KHSU mission statement from long ago. It states:

Terry Torgerson

"To educate, enrich and entertain people throughout Northwestern California and Southwestern Oregon by providing diverse, high-quality radio programming. As a public service of Humboldt State University, KHSU strives to present thoughtful and intelligent perspectives on local, national and international issues. Its objectives include fostering the arts, sciences and humanities, giving voice to underrepresented points of view, serving minority as well as majority needs, and both guiding and reflecting public intellect and taste. KHSU encourages faculty, student and community participation in programming and other station affairs."

KHSU is not broken. It has lived up to its mission statement for the most part.

There has to be some backdoor intervention by individuals who had the ear of Mr. Wruck and by extension, Mr. Fretwell. Somewhere along the way, someone thought it a good idea to fire Katie Whiteside from her job at KHSU as program/operations director.

Ms. Whiteside was not "liked" by Mr. Fretwell and that was known. There remains a hostile workplace at KHSU. Mr. Fretwell must resign or be let go, same for Mr. Wruck. I don't understand why HSU President Lisa Rossbacher does not do this.

I think the men have her cornered.

Sharon Fennell, Manila

Corrections

A story in the Aug. 30, 2018 edition of the North Coast Journal headlined "Get Out of Jail Free" included an inaccurate title for Humboldt County Public Defender Marek Reavis. Board. The board, acting on input received by the community, approved a memo with the following language: "The members of the KHSU community who have voiced their opinion, through the conduit of the KHSU CAB, formally submits their vote of no confidence in Peter Fretwell as general manager of KHSU, and respectfully requests his termination." The Journal regrets the errors.

Surrendering to 'Take Responsibility'

Marci Kitchen opts not to fight prosecutors' efforts to jail her

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

On the eve of a hearing to determine if she should be taken into custody pending sentencing in her vehicular manslaughter case, Marci Kitchen surrendered her bail bond and voluntarily committed herself to the Humboldt County jail Sept. 3, forfeiting what may have been her last night as a free woman for some years.

Max Hadley, whom the court recently appointed to be Kitchen's mitigation specialist, said Kitchen decided to voluntarily surrender and not to oppose prosecutors' efforts to jail her until her Sept. 18 sentencing hearing in an effort to "take responsibility." Mitigation specialists are certified experts brought into a criminal case with the purpose of researching a defendant's life in order to put his or her crimes into a larger context, with a special focus on mitigating factors that the defense can argue should be taken into account at sentencing. They are frequently appointed — or hired by private defense attorneys — in cases with open pleas and a wide spectrum of sentencing outcomes, or in cases that are death-penalty eligible or carry the potential for lifetime incarceration.

Kitchen pleaded guilty as charged in the case Aug. 20, admitting that she was driving drunk when she struck and killed two 14-year-old girls, one of whom was her daughter, on Eel River Drive shortly after dusk July 12, 2016, and fled the scene. She had remained free after posting $750,000 bail in the case but was due in court Sept. 4 for a custody hearing at which prosecutors were going to argue that she should be held in jail until her sentencing hearing, when she faces a maximum sentence of up to 11 years in state prison, according to prosecutors, but could be released on probation.

Hadley said Kitchen made the decision to voluntarily surrender her bond.

"She decided she was going to do what she has wanted to do all along, which was take responsibility for this and start serving her time now," Hadley said. "Her lawyers never would let her talk about this case or take responsibility because they felt the case could be litigated, so she was never able to do this because her lawyers advised against it."

Kiya Kitchen, Kitchen's daughter, and her friend Faith Tsarnas were both struck from behind while skateboarding on Eel River Drive. Tsarnas died at the Fortuna crash site and Kiya Kitchen died of her injuries a day later at a Bay Area hospital.

After fleeing the scene of the crash, Kitchen surrendered to authorities two months later when — after the California Highway Patrol finished its investigation — prosecutors charged her with two counts of vehicular manslaughter, one count of driving under the influence causing injury and one count of fleeing the scene of an injury crash.

Kitchen had pleaded not guilty in the case — which dragged through the local court system, bogged down by repeated delays, including one that came after her private attorneys stepped away from the case, saying she'd run out of money to pay them. But she surprised everyone last month when she pleaded guilty as charged, admitting to each of the four counts and the seven special allegations she faced.

During the change of plea hearing, both Deputy District Attorney Stacey Eads and local attorney Heidi Holmquist-Wells, who was in court representing Kiya Kitchen's father and brother, asked the court to take Kitchen into custody pending sentencing, noting that she has essentially been convicted, poses a flight risk and that more than 750 days had passed since the girls were killed. Interim Conflict Counsel Meagan O'Connell, who's representing Kitchen in the case, argued against jailing her client, saying she'd abided by all conditions of her bail and made all her court appearances.

Judge Kaleb Cockrum denied the request from the prosecution for the time being but set the Sept. 4 hearing to allow both sides to officially argue the matter. But after Kitchen's surrender, Cockrum indicated she is now being held without bail.

Kitchen appeared briefly in court Sept. 4 but did not stay for the proceeding. Instead she was led by bailiffs from the courtroom and back to the jail, as she's waived her right to be physically present at all hearings in the case and allowed O'Connell to appear on her behalf.

Hadley told the Journal after the hearing that Kitchen is being held in isolation at the jail because staff fears for her safety.

"She did not make that request and we did not make it for her," Hadley said. "But I think there's good reason for them to do that."

During the brief Sept. 4 hearing, O'Connell indicated to the court that Kitchen plans to read a statement at the time of her sentencing, which would constitute the first time she has made a public comment since her Jeep struck and killed the two girls in 2016.

Cockrum also granted a pair of requests from local media to take video footage and photographs of Kitchen's sentencing hearing and said he would inquire about broadcasting the sentencing hearing in Supervisors Chambers on the courthouse's first floor in anticipation that a larger crowd may attend the hearing than the courtroom can accommodate.

In the wake of Kitchen's surrender, some have speculated that she opted to enter jail voluntarily in order to receive credit at her sentencing hearing for time served. While it's true that Kitchen will likely receive credits when she is sentenced for the 15 days she will have already been in custody — plus an equal number of credits for "good conduct" — it's worth noting that the local good conduct credits come at a slower clip than those Kitchen would be eligible to receive in prison.

Locally, inmates deemed to have served time with "good conduct" receive an equal credit for each day served, meaning that if Kitchen has served 15 days at the time of her sentencing with good conduct, she would receive credit for a total of 30 days served. But under Proposition 57, people serving time for "nonviolent" offenses like vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated without gross negligence are eligible to serve only a third of their sentence with "good conduct," meaning Kitchen would be credited with 45 days served for 15 actual days in prison.

When Kitchen appears to be sentenced Sept. 18, she will face a wide range of potential sentences. Prosecutors have argued that her total exposure in the case is 11 years, while O'Connell has calculated the maximum penalty to be 10 years and four months. But Cockrum conditioned Kitchen's plea on her receiving a mid-term sentence for the principal manslaughter charge, which would reduce her maximum exposure by two years. (Cockrum retains the option of sentencing Kitchen to the maximum term, but doing so would give her the option of taking back her plea and proceeding to trial in the case.) It's worth noting that Kitchen is also eligible for probation.

A number of recent high-profile vehicular manslaughter cases have seen judges take a seemingly light hand at the time of sentencing.

In 2013, Michael Joseph Campbell, a former Humboldt County Sheriff's Office deputy who pleaded guilty to gross vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated stemming from the 2012 DUI motorcycle crash that killed 30-year-old Cara Banduc-ci, faced a maximum sentence of 10 years in state prison. But Judge Bruce Watson opted to sentence Campbell to a year in county jail and six years probation, saying he found Campbell unlikely to reoffend.

Last year, Kade Chandler faced a maximum sentence of 12 years in state prison after pleading guilty to two counts of gross vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated stemming from the Feb. 21, 2015, crash on State Route 36 that killed two of his passengers, Savannah Kindred, 21, and Kendra Lewis, 19. Judge John Feeney sentenced him to a year in county jail and 10 years probation.

Speaking to the Journal after Kitchen surrendered her bail bond Sept. 3, Hadley reiterated that Kitchen was taking the action in an effort to take responsibility in the case and not in an effort to angle for a more lenient sentence.

"She's waiting to be sentenced and will accept whatever that sentence is," Hadley said.

Popular Musician, Tribal Leader Dead at 74

Merv George Sr. — Hoopa tribal member, religious dance leader and popular musician — died Aug. 31 after suffering a severe stroke earlier in the week. He was 74.

According to a post on Merv George Jr.'s Facebook page, his father was being transported home from Redding Mercy Hospital when he died. "He had my mom by his side and he went peacefully," George Jr. wrote, adding that "he waited until we got near Weaverville and could see the Trinity River before he left us."

While George Sr. was perhaps best known locally as the front man for the popular Merv George Band, which plays funk, rock and country music with George Jr. backing his dad on drums, he was also a religious dance and ceremonial leader for the Hoopa Tribe and keeper of regalia. George Sr. — along with wife Laura, daughter Melodie, George Jr., and his wife Wendy — was also consulted as a curator when the Smithsonian Institution opened the National Museum of the American Indian in 2004 and included an exhibit on the Hupa people and culture.

The Hoopa Tribe's agreement with the Smithsonian was controversial among some tribal members, who felt it was inappropriate to give regalia to the institute given the way tribal artifacts and regalia had been treated by museums in the past. But George Sr. told the Journal in 2004 that he felt the relationship with the Smithsonian was different, adding that he could request that certain items be returned to the tribe as needed. The loan-back idea was put into practice in 2001, when George Sr.'s granddaughter celebrated her coming of age with a traditional Flower Dance ("The Flower Dancers," Aug. 2). At George Sr.'s request, a Smithsonian representative personally flew to California to hand-deliver a woven hat to be used in the ceremony.

"We danced for her and I wore it," he said at the time. "It was more or less a symbolic gesture on their part. I gave it back and they put it back in the museum."

George Sr. also worked in Eureka's Public Works Department for 30 years before retiring as a maintenance supervisor in 1998.

Last year, the Merv George Band celebrated 60 years of playing music together — a span in which they played at wedding receptions, local festivals and just about every Humboldt County watering hole with a stage, as well as every Fortuna High School class of 1966 reunion, according to an article in the Times-Standard. The band always seemed to get a crowd on its feet.

The short Facebook post from George Jr. thanks family and friends for the "thoughts and prayers" offered "over these past few difficult days."

"Dad was a true warrior and fought all the way till the end," he wrote. "I have no doubt your love and strength provided him extra strength."

George Jr. said the family is planning a private graveside ceremony for his father but will host a public celebration of his life later this fall, possibly on Oct. 21, George Sr.'s birthday.

Reefer Madness and Bongzilla

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

BuzzFeed News published a groundbreaking report Aug. 28 that the Trump administration has secretly formed a committee of federal agencies to combat growing public support for marijuana and portray the drug as a national threat.

Dubbed the Marijuana Policy Coordination Committee, the clandestine group includes 14 federal agencies and the Drug Enforcement Administration working under instruction to submit “data demonstrating the most significant negative trends” regarding marijuana and the “threats” the drug poses to the country. Raising alarm among policy buffs and marijuana advocates alike is the fact that, according to BuzzFeed’s report, which is based on interviews with agency staff and memos and emails obtained by the news outlet, the committee is only asking officials for information that portrays cannabis in a negative light, allegedly in an effort to combat a national narrative that is biased in favor of the plant.

“The prevailing marijuana narrative in the U.S. is partial, one-sided, and inaccurate,” BuzzFeed quotes a summary of a July 27 White House meeting as saying, “Staff believe that if the administration is to turn the tide on increasing marijuana use there is an urgent need to message the facts about the negative impacts of marijuana use, production, and trafficking on national health, safety and security.”

In a follow-up memo, White House officials reportedly directed the committee that “departments should provide ... the most significant data demonstrating negative trends, with a statement describing the implications of such trends.”

To be clear, there is certainly a fair argument to be made that, in the face of prohibition and a resultant dearth of scientific data, advocates of cannabis decriminalization have overstepped in selling the drug as a natural, non-addictive substance with widespread health benefits. (In our Aug. 23 Week in Weed column “The High Price of Freedom,” we quoted researchers alarmed at increasing rates of cannabis-use disorder and an Atlantic story that warns we are replacing one form of reefer madness with another.)

But the answer to any form of reefer

madness should be scientific study, hard data and informed policy discussions held in public, not a covert propaganda effort that seeks to swing public sentiment by showcasing negative impacts while ignoring anything positive about the growing state legalization movement that now has spread through 39 states, including nine that have legalized adult recreational use.

John Hudak, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, told BuzzFeed that not only is the committee bad politics — noting that it apparently undercuts Trump’s pledges to respect states’ rights on the issue and flies in the face of growing public support for legalization — but also deemed it “policy malpractice” to purposefully collect and disseminate one-sided data.

In seemingly unrelated news, artist Jason Harris unveiled “Bongzilla,” a 24-foot-high, 800-pound bong, in Las Vegas this week. Seriously.

The bong, which Harris told the LA Times is his artistic opus to cannabis culture, sits alongside two flights of spiraling stairs that allow people to get from the ground, where its 100-gallon water reservoir sits, to its mouthpiece. The bong’s bowl can hold up to a quarter of a pound of cannabis, according to the Times, and the thing took 15 people blowing glass eight hours a day for four days to create.

“I make giant bongs,” Harris told the paper. “They are my voice to make noise in the world.”

The catch — and it’s a pretty huge one — is that Nevada law prohibits cannabis consumption in public places, rendering “Bongzilla” little more than a tacky, oversized ode to conspicuous consumption, the kind that has plenty of company in Vegas.

This raises the question, with shit like this on proud parade in cannabis culture, who needs a covert effort to “message the negative impacts of marijuana?”

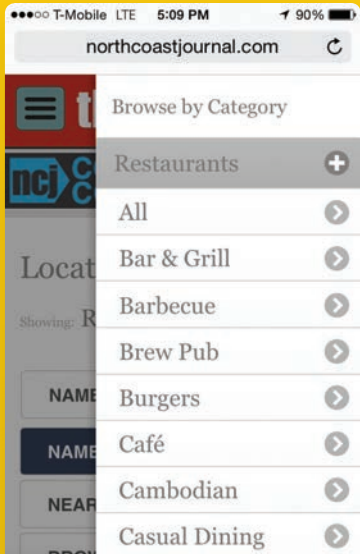

Dude, it’s on full display, two stories tall and bathed in neon light.

How a lecture and a teen's broken beer bottle inspired the world's largest coastal cleanup event

By Joe Abbott

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

*I'd love to change the world
But I don't know what to do,
So I'll leave it up to you.'*

— Ten Years After

When you stand on the Earth's surface, it seems infinite, a place beyond dimension. A human is less significant than an ant fallen into the mid-Pacific. Nothing.

From space our world is less expansive.

Those are often the youthful perspectives when one appraises the future. Nothing seems so fraught with possibilities, yet enmeshed with such futility. There's so much to do, so much to change. Maybe, if one is driven, one has an idea and a place to start. But for the rest of us there's a question of luck and enthusiasm.

I was born in Eureka. Although I've been happy these past 27 years in Chico, if asked where's home, without hesitation my heart answers Humboldt County. I hunted and fished in my early years, played ball and found work in a couple lumber mills, the Public Guardian's Office, the Public Health Department, the Humboldt State University Foundation on an alumnus-donated vessel. But I never had the feeling that I'd landed. Maybe that's characteristic of being young, in my 20s, a time for gathering experience and information. Knowledge comes of processing those experiences and shaping them into the whole person.

It's difficult to pinpoint a genesis and I certainly didn't recognize it at the time, but when I was a teen a couple seeds were planted that would take some years to germinate. And that even those moments are fixed in memory seems curious.

Underage, 17, four friends and I parked on our usual dirt road outside Eureka to drink beer. Typically, we broke our empty bottles on the roadside. So what? Everyone else's garbage went the same way. That was how Friday or Saturday nights began before we drove into town to look for fun. One night an older friend decided he'd seen enough to "kick the ass of the next guy who threw a bottle," and he was serious. The thought startled; it wasn't about "ass-kicking" but the strange notion, the first time a peer was concerned with litter. And he was (is) a friend whose words are worth considering. But really, who cared if you threw your stuff around?

A couple years later, in a biology class circa 1968, a College of the Redwoods instructor mentioned the word "environmentalism," explaining it would be a significant scientific field in the future. He explained the interconnectedness of all systems and said we would become increasingly aware of natural and human influence on them. Basically uninformed, I scoffed but made note of the word and eventually had occasion to mull the thought of human influence on wild places.

Strange that I remember and combine those moments, an indication of their impact when I did become aware of litter. The stuff was all around me. It was everywhere and I hardly noticed. These days it's difficult to comprehend oblivion when confronted by the garbage people leave lying about. It disgusts most of us. But in the 1960s, despite national "litterbug" campaigns, the stuff seemed a normal part of the landscape to a teenager. It was essentially so ubiquitous as to be a natural component of human presence.

Provincial attitudes and youthful ignorance aside, I did stop throwing around beer bottles and most other trash, though into my 20s I smoked and littered Marlboro filters every day, selectively ignoring that litter on the basis of size.

But ideas evolve. With time came a growing antipathy and I began to detest the garbage and environmental degradation I was seeing. In-your-face piles of broken bottles and garbage left at beach accesses. Old appliances. Mattresses. Possibly individuals were littering less than in previous decades but Humboldt County's beauty attracted a population influx that seemed to coincide with litter piles. That became an impediment to enjoyment of, particularly, beaches. Humboldt was my home and these other people were ruining the place.

I was living in a friend's beach house in Manila, which was then an impoverished area where rich people would live if it were any place other than Humboldt County. I began to burn while dodging broken bottles and trash in my bare feet as I ran 4 or 5 miles on the beach every morning before work. Then a manifestation of my frustration: action! My new girlfriend and I began carrying away beach litter we encountered on walks. We became somewhat obsessed. We were like the boy in John Updike's "A&P" — it's fatal to take moral action because it's impossible to retreat.

In 1977 I had the idea for a grant application to clean Humboldt's beaches. The idea now seems absurd — a young hippie finding federal funding to clean beaches — but youth and naivety were puny compared to enthusiasm. Besides, my girlfriend, now wife, Ann Morrissey, had experience: She worked at the North Country Women's Clinic on a grant that she'd written. Ann knew how to set out a financial prospectus. Working together, we finished the application in one long evening, I composing the justification and plan, she budgeting the grant. The beach cleanup proposal was conjured on a 1950s-era Tower President manual typewriter. I still have it but haven't used it since.

I approached the Northcoast Environmental Center, an Arcata-based nonprofit advocacy group committed to all causes environmental, and met Director Tim McKay to pitch the concept of a grant-funded beach cleanup project. McKay was dubious but said the center would sponsor the project if I could find funding. He proposed labeling the grant application the "Beach Beautification and Restoration Project," a more professional sounding title. The plan was simple: A three-person crew would scour litter from the entirety of Humboldt County's accessible beaches. I wrote the grant with the intent of doing community outreach to locate volunteers among juvenile offenders, schools, civic groups and whomever we could convince to help. At the time there was no plan for the project to continue past the two years the grant would fund.

McKay was pleased when the grant was accepted for $29,000. I had been convinced we would be funded. A young woman was hired as crew leader while Sid Dominitz, journalist and writer/editor at the Econews and eventual NEC director, and I were crew. We “rented” my 1953 Chevy pickup, paid me mileage and filled the back with gunny sacks.

There was little planning other than to do it. It was that simple.

Arriving at Dominitz’s Trinidad house the first morning, I honked the horn several times and Dominitz, coffee cup in hand, casually wandered out the door. Annoyed with my honking, he asked, “What is this, high school?” That set the tone for mornings we cleaned north of Arcata and stopped to pick him up. Seemed like he was always having a smoke and coffee or sitting on the can when we arrived. His timing was perfect.

Comes to mind the morning when Dominitz came outside with boxing gloves and asked if anyone wanted to spar. I was game and went at it with him. He cleaned my clock. Seems Dominitz had Golden Gloves experience in New York City. Pretty funny, though I was furious. Hard to remain composed when you’re getting pounded. If Dominitz was still alive, he’d laugh to recall that morning. Working side by side, I wound up loving the guy’s razor-sharp humor. He was cynical in the best ways, clever and quick-witted company on even bitter cold or rainy mornings.

In time our crew grew. The new guys rode in back without seatbelts under my homemade hippie canopy. That casual approach could never occur now and even then was an OSHA nightmare. Winter was miserable for the crew and the trip home smelled of garbage — mostly “clean” garbage that had drifted ashore, but sometimes nasty party leavings or disposable diapers. But ours was a committed crew, the way groups faced with futility sometimes bond in determination.

We had occasional juvenile offenders working short-term and were supplemented by two work-release crewmen from San Quentin State Prison. In the summer most of the regular crew worked without shoes, and the former prisoners thought that was a bright idea and got their chalk-white toes, hidden from sunlight for years, scooting along the shoreline and dunes. Except, that first day barefoot, both got terrible blistered sunburns on their feet. They weren’t happy.

Once, one guy asked me what “my angle” was for working so hard: “Joe, what’s in this for you?” He didn’t understand we did the cleanup for the right reasons, since the pay was decidedly inadequate. By that point I was the crew leader and no one worked or pushed harder. I was a convert, driven to keep the beaches clean, influenced by the presence of other devoted environmentalists.

In addition to the adult and juvenile offenders, we worked large beach cleanup projects with several schools, scouts and assorted other groups. A Girl Scout council selected me its “Environmentalism of the Year.” I was charmed and honored.

We started at Prairie Creek and worked south at every accessible Humboldt County beach. One afternoon in Shelter Cove, I found a $20 bill, a pair of new tennis in my size and a rigged fishing pole along the sanded logs, though most recovered material consisted of plastic, glass and tires. And diapers. Lots of disposable dirty diapers, particularly along the Clam

We had taken more than 21 tons of waste and garbage (and accursed abandoned tires — toted over sand, sometimes for miles) off Humboldt County beaches, all lugged on our backs to our parked truck.

Beach frontal road. What kind of pigs left messy diapers to spoil the beach experience for others? At the end of every day we sorted our haul, recycling what we could at the Arcata Recycling Center, and recorded our tally of weight and recyclables (the BB&R Project occurred prior to California’s container deposit legislation; non-deposit recyclable containers accounted for more than 25 percent of our load for the year and a half I worked at NEC).

As expected, there were plenty of interesting finds, including glass floats and fishermen’s effluvia, such as marker buoys, and I remember at Big Lagoon a fine rainbow-enameled cigarette case I found that contained rolled joints. Not hard to see how it had been forgotten. There were countless clothing articles and baseball caps and a Czech fisherman’s hat I still have. We conducted a weekly avian fatality count for the Point Reyes Bird Observatory as part of the Beautification Project, and a marine mammal mortality survey for the Sausalito Marine Mammal

Center. For the Econews front page, we once photographed a dead western grebe with its neck in a plastic six-pack band.

While the crew worked beaches Fridays, Sid and I solicited volunteers from schools and civic clubs to sponsor beach cleanup events. We discovered even conservative groups opposed to government spending shared our enthusiasm for clean shores, especially when they learned the frugality of our efforts. Put in the context of tourism, we were quite appreciated and became the subjects of local newspaper and television stories.

We knew grant funding would expire after two years. We had taken more than 21 tons of waste and garbage (and accursed abandoned tires — toted over sand, sometimes for miles) off Humboldt County beaches, all lugged on our backs to our parked truck. From experience we knew that dirty beaches attracted more filth and clean beaches stayed that way considerably longer. But we were aware the beaches would eventually revert to pre-cleanup messes.

About this time, I was leaving the crew. Ann was accepted at the University of Wisconsin Medical School and I was headed east with her. I wasn’t anxious to leave: We had almost a half-year left before the grant would expire. McKay and Dominitz wouldn’t surrender what we’d accomplished and came up with the all-volun-

How to get involved

The Northcoast Environmental Center is coordinating Coastal Cleanup efforts at more than 40 sites throughout Humboldt County from 9 a.m. to noon on Sept. 15. Annually, the event sees about 1,000 volunteers turn out to remove about 7 tons of trash and recyclables from local beaches, rivers, estuaries and bay-front properties. Madison Peters, the NEC's coastal programs coordinator, says there are a variety of ways to get involved.

Folks interested in serving as site captains to lead a volunteer group at a specific location should sign up by contacting the NEC (822-6918), stopping by its office at 415 I St. in Arcata or visiting www.yournec.org/coastalcleanupday. Those just looking to show up and help out can either go to the NEC's site, Clam Beach, or pretty much any other noteworthy beach in Humboldt County, as most will have volunteer crews in place. But Peters stressed the event is really about people doing what they can. "There's loads of room to get involved," she said. "If you can't drive out to the beach or a watershed, clean up around your home. Even your street is a part of it because all that trash is going to go somewhere, and that's into the watershed." Supplies — including trash bags and gloves — and scorecards to record how much trash is removed are available at the NEC office or by stopping by the nonprofit's booth at the North Country Fair on the day of the cleanup. Additionally, Peters said people can download an app — CleanSwell — that will allow them to upload the results of their cleanup efforts to be included with statewide tallies.

teer Adopt-a-Beach concept to continue the work. I believed the cleanup effort required financial stewardship to remain successful but we commenced outreach while I was still at NEC.

After my departure Dominitz took over as crew leader and, until grant funding expired, the remaining crew loaded trash bags into the trunk of his old Plymouth. He and McKay continued the effort at what became an NEC legacy: Adopt-a-Beach, a 1979 project that, modeling Oregon's later launch of its statewide campaign, became the California Coastal Commission's California Coastal Cleanup Day. Eventually, CCCD morphed into the largest single-day marine environmental volunteer activity in the United States and the world. According to a past Coastal Commission report:

"In 1993, California Coastal Cleanup Day was recognized by the Guinness Book of World Records as the 'largest garbage collection' ever organized, with 50,405 volunteers. Since then, the reach of Coastal Cleanup Day has steadily spread inland. Most of the marine debris that we find on our beaches actually starts as urban trash or street litter, so this continuing effort to 'stop trash where it starts' has actually increased the amount of trash picked up per person each year."

These days the highly successful California Coastal Cleanup Day is part of International Coastal Cleanup Day. Figures for 2015 show the United States contributed more than 200,000 volunteers; worldwide there were almost 800,000 from 47 countries removing more than 18 million pounds of trash. The international cleanup program counted 11.5 million volunteers by its 30th anniversary.

Adopt-a-Beach in Humboldt County, indeed, and everywhere else, too.

That this program — annually supported by hundreds of thousands of volunteers worldwide — had its inspiration seeded by broken beer bottles and a College of the Redwoods biology lecture leads us to believe in many things. That small acts, right ones, can evolve; that it's possible the ideas and idealism of the young can bear fruit.

Ann and I are proud to have written the original grant, proud to be a part of an effort we can all support. We appreciate McKay and Dominitz (both now deceased) and their devotion to Arcata's NEC. We admire the many, the millions, who volunteer. ●

Biking the Humboldt Bay Trail

On the path, in the weeds and around the eucalyptus bark

By Louisa Rogers
getout@northcoastjournal.com

I used to ride my bike from Eureka to Arcata and back a couple times a week but since I no longer have a regular date in Arcata, I haven't had a chance to test the new Humboldt Bay Trail along the U.S. Highway 101 corridor. Now with this NCJ assignment, I have just the opportunity. A friend who lives in McKinleyville and I make a date to meet halfway and I hop on my bike.

Heading North

In Eureka, I speed down Waterfront Drive, past the Adorni Center and Halvorsen Park, across the gleaming metal bridges and under the Eureka Slough bridge. Cycling through the Shoreline RV Park, I pass the Harley-Davidson dealership and turn right on the ramp to merge with traffic onto U.S. Highway 101 headed north.

Now I'm back on classic territory, the mauve-colored shoulder. I take a right onto Jacobs Avenue and cycle parallel to the freeway briefly, then back onto U.S. Highway 101, zipping along merrily, humming to myself. All is well in my world. I pass the mill to my left. Check. Pass Indianola. Check. And, here we are: Bracut! I'm excited, looking forward to checking out the new trail from Bracut to Arcata.

I notice the absence of a sign, though. Unless you read up about all this, how are you to know this new bike trail exists? And what about all the touring cyclists I see loaded with panniers, people who are obviously not from these parts? If they're heading north, they'll miss this great new trail.

Don't do this

I cross U.S. Highway 101 to Bracut, expecting to find the trail right there. Hmm.

Where is it? I start to cycle the wrong way on the shoulder — not a good idea, I know, but what else am I supposed to do? It must be within the Bracut Industrial Park. So I turn around and cycle into the park, as far as I can. I come upon something I never knew existed, a faded sign saying "Bracut Ecological Marsh: a Project of the State Coastal Conservancy RCAA 1989." I glimpse the shoulder to my right, across some thistles, brush and the railroad track. The bike gets tangled in weeds and my legs bleed from scratches, but I reach the shoulder after a couple of minutes and illegally cycle north 200 yards, parallel to the highway. Then I gratefully turn left onto the new trail.

Do this

If you are cycling north, do as I say now, not as I did: Cycle to the Bayside Cutoff, where you can (carefully) cross U.S. Highway 101, then cycle with the traffic ¼ mile south and turn right onto the trail.

Soon the trail veers away from the highway. Between the wildflowers, the bay, the grass dancing in the breeze and, best of all, the absence of traffic, I feel like I'm on a country lane. I pass two women and their dogs, then a few minutes later a woman skating. I ask her to take a photo and learn she's from El Salvador and lives here with her American husband. We notice the picnic tables nearby, a nice touch. Then we part, she heading south and I north. Before long I'm passing the Arcata Marsh, then crossing Samoa Boulevard and soon I'm at the Arcata Plaza.

Heading South

A couple of hours later, on my return trip, I don't have to take my life into my hands crossing the highway. Cycling under the eucalyptus trees, I take particular note because of the recent decision by the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors to remove more than 200 of them. I see some detritus from the branches but nothing that isn't easily avoidable. As a cyclist, I'm baffled by the intensity around this heated issue and think the decision is a gross overreaction.

Reaching Target, I access the bike path from the back of the parking lot and from there it's a straight shot home.

The trail is a terrific start

I will be cycling much more often to Arcata now that we have it. Fingers crossed that the state funding the county has applied for comes through. In the meantime, I recommend a sign be placed at the Bayside Cutoff heading north to alert cyclists of access to the trail there.

Louisa Rogers has been riding a bike for more than 50 years and has no plans to stop.

The Bird and the Brine

A lesson in making the best chicken ever

By Malina Syvoravong

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

I have the best chicken recipe for you all. But before you start on this journey, you must have experienced the trial and error of making a bad chicken. Failing is part of really understanding how to make an incredible roasted chicken. Now, what do you consider a good piece of chicken? We all have varying tastes regarding chicken's moist, crunchy, salty qualities. Try to understand your own tastes. Are you that type of person that loves leftover chicken that is dry and tasteless? Adjust the recipe to cook it for 40 minutes longer and don't even bother brining. Hell, just buy some TV dinner chicken from the grocery store or head to a gas station with a hot deli. There's no need to make anything. For others who love a chicken that is tender, moist and flavorful, follow along.

The quality of the meat makes a difference. But if you don't have access or the funds to spend on pricier meat, brine or at the very least season your chicken. Actually, always do that. Even if it's just some breasts or thighs. Always. I recently went to a cookout where I had to grab a package of raw chicken out of a man's hands because he had been throwing pieces straight onto the grill without any preparation. Raw, bare chicken, straight from the plastic casing onto the smoking hot grill. A part of me died when I saw that naked piece of chicken breast flop onto the sizzling iron rods. I ran off to the kitchen with the packaged chicken so I could oil, salt and pepper it. He followed me there and had the audacity to ask, "Why are you seasoning the chicken?" I was appalled and offended but kept going as I stared him dead in the eyes. He was a parody of himself and we shall never speak of that moment again.

Back to the best chicken you will ever have. Brining the meat allows it to absorb more water through osmosis and retain that water while it's being cooked, which results in juicy tenderness. Whatever herbs, spices or extra flavorings you choose to put in your brine will permeate the meat through this process, too. If seasoning chicken is just too much for you to do, at least brine it. Don't let this step be forgotten. To keep it real, music and dancing while making your chicken will always make the experience more enjoyable. I personally love singing Drake's "Best I Ever Had" to my prepped poultry because — do I need to really say it again?

Another step that seems counterintuitive (but bear with me), is making sure to pat the chicken's skin dry. A lint-free paper towel (Bounty is my favorite brand) does well getting all the exterior liquids out. This is especially important if you are yearning for a crisp skin but, if you are planning on braising or grilling, you can skip this step. This is also important for making fried chicken but that's another article.

Make me proud the next time you make yourself a whole roast chicken or just a thigh by following at least one of these steps. It will impress your fellow poultry connoisseurs or a hot date you've met on Tinder. But if your date prefers dry chicken, ghost them.

The Best Chicken Thighs

If ghee is unavailable, you can use olive oil or make your own clarified butter. Get out your meat thermometer if you have one. Serves 2.

Ingredients:

- 2 chicken thighs, skin on
- 4 cups brining liquid (4 tablespoons salt to a quart of water)
- 1 tablespoon fresh thyme, chopped

1 teaspoon fresh parsley, chopped
 2 rosemary sprigs, leaves only
 5-6 small garlic cloves, peeled and chopped
 1 teaspoon salt
 ½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
 ½ cup Gold Nugget ghee

The day before cooking, place the chicken in a bowl and pour in enough brining liquid so that it covers both pieces. Cover and refrigerate overnight.

Remove the chicken from the refrigerator. Place a small rack or crumpled aluminum foil onto a tray or plate. Drain the chicken, then pat it dry with a paper towel. Make sure to get under those crevices and wrinkled skin. Lay the chicken onto the rack or foil. Place this set up in an open area of the fridge where the cold air can fully circulate around the chicken. Leave the chicken in refrigerator for 30 minutes to 1 hour.

Take the chicken out and rub the ghee into the skin and between the skin and meat. Mix the chopped herbs and garlic, and stuff equal amounts under the skin of each thigh. Salt and pepper the outer layer.

Place the thighs uncovered in a baking pan on the center rack of the oven for 35-40 minutes. The chicken will be done when it hits 165 F, or when the juice runs clear when pierced at the thickest point.

Malina Syvoravong wishes she was Drake's other baby mama. She's a Humboldt native living in Oakland. She still has her crystal collection.

Setlist

Road Warrior

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

I am posting this edition of the Setlist from the road, having joined up with the herds of holiday travelers to celebrate the end of summer by driving for a ghastly amount of time to a faraway place. And while I am not towing a boat or driving an absurdly sized RV, I am nonetheless enjoying a small piece of America. Specifically Missoula, Montana, where it's dry and hot during the day, the water is clear and the nights are not friendly toward T-shirts and bare feet. It's a beautiful place, though — it had better be after driving for what seemed like the better part of a decade when we were crawling through the treeless dustbowl of eastern Oregon and Washington — and the people are friendly. So while I explore the nightlife of this remote college town in the wilderness, I invite you to do the same in the lovely outpost you call home. Have a great week.

Thursday

In the interest of bringing you different options for your evenings, I feel compelled to inform you that there's a new, informal house venue show series near downtown Arcata called Concerts at the Crib. Tonight at 8 p.m. you can catch award-winning Nashville-based Americana and folk duo Mare Wakefield and Nomad as they come through town in support of their newest record Time to Fly. For venue address and information, call Gregg at 499-8516 or send an email to crib1251@gmail.com. The suggested donation for the show has a sliding scale of $10-$25.

Friday

Outstanding Italian psychedelic duo Father Murphy is on its last tour ever so there is a once-in-a-lifetime show going down at the Miniplex tonight at 9 p.m., when that tour touches down in fair Arcata. The group has earned raving rants of acclaim from past tour coevals like Jarboe and Xiu Xiu. If you like those outer limits luminaries, you will love this group, too. The always great CV opens the night's action ($10).

Saturday

Pin Ups on Tour is a traveling burlesque variety show that recreates a 1940'sstyle USO show, complete with vintage costumes, dancing and music. Its aim is to raise money for wounded veterans and performers will be shaking a leg at the Arcata Vet's Hall at 6 p.m. tonight. There is a dinner at 6 p.m. for $10, the show is over 18 only (price TBA), period attire is encouraged, and veterans and active duty service members get in for free with an RSVP to doright@dorightind.com.

Returning native trumpeter Nicholas Talvola has toured extensively throughout Europe on the professional jazz circuit. Tonight at 8 p.m. he teams up with more rooted local jazzbos, including Tim Randles, Ken Lawrence and Tommy Fitzmaurice for a tribute to Miles Davis at the Arcata Playhouse. Having heard Mr. Talvola play a few times in the past year, I can tell you this will likely be a great show ($12, $10 students and Playhouse members).

OG Rasta vocal harmonizers Israel Vibration are putting on a big one at the Eureka Municipal Auditorium tonight at 9 p.m. ($25, $20 advance). With a career spanning five decades, these Jamaican polio survivors and reggae monks are always known to put on a good show when they visit the Emerald Triangle. DJ Dub Cowboy opens the show.

Sunday

The Jam continues its Sundaze electronic dance music series with a curation by Moontribe Collective's own eminent DJ Ben Annand. Providing local color on the 1s and 2s will be Marjo Lak and Derek Watts. The fun starts at 9 p.m. and the door price is $5 until 10 p.m., when it bumps up to $8, so get down early and stay late.

Blues-tinged surf rockers from the cold Oregon coast Pigasus Trio return to the Siren's Song tonight at 8 p.m. to team up with local indie R&B act James F and the Blackbirds for a night of analog fun. It's Monday night in early September and the cover's only $5. What do you have to lose?

Tuesday

Native Nashvillian-cum-deni-zen-of-Franklin, Kentucky, Rayland Baxter — who, rumor has it, writes tunes in an old rubber band factory — plays a sort of strutting and soulful rock 'n' roll that comes across like a smoothie of equal parts Yardbirds, Replacements and Big Star. He can be found with his band tonight around 8:30 p.m. at Humbrews, where he will be dropping some science about songwriting, I have no doubt ($15, $12 advance).

Wednesday

Peace-seeking, world touring, fiddle playin' Phoebe Hunt brings her country-smoked (with incense) group Phoebe Hunt and the Gatherers to Ferndale this evening to perform songs from her latest release Shanti's Shadow. Consisting of songs about redemption through suffering and meditation and the release of pain, her set will appropriately be going down in the cemetery adjacent converted sanctuary of The Old Steeple. Come release the ghosts with some pretty acoustic music at 7:30 p.m. ($25).

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Collin Yeo is recreating the Oregon Trail in a Subaru with less river fording, better food and substantially less dysentery (hopefully). If he decides to return from the magical mountains of Montana, he will continue living in Arcata.

It's the quarter-century anniversary of an event for the quarter-mile loving set. Yes, it's been 25 years since the first Cruz'n Eureka rumbled to life. The benefit for Boys & Girls Club of the Redwoods arrives in style Sept. 6-8 in Old Town.

The good times roll Thursday, Sept. 6 with the event kick-off Poker Run starting at 6 p.m. at the Wharfinger Building and (don't blink) ending up at the Vista Del Mar at 7:30 p.m. for the VDM Show & Shine in the parking lot with live music on the risers from Ghost Train, a raffle, vendors and more (free). Later, there's a participant-only Ice Breaker BBQ at Boys & Girls Club Teen Center from 4 to 6 p.m. and the Friday night main event for everyone, the Cruz' thru Old Town from 6 to 7 p.m. After the cruise, say hello to the cars parked in front of the Eureka Theater before sliding on your Ray-Bans for the high-octane hilarity of The Blues Brothers (1980) — packed with So. Many. Car. Chases. and musical cameos — showing at 7:30 p.m. ($5). Don't even "Think!" about missing Aretha Franklin in this one. Rest in splendor, queen. Saturday, Sept. 8 take a few laps around the Car Show, Street Fair, raffle and swap meet starting at Second and C streets (free). Check out the fenders and vendors from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., with trophies bestowed at 3 p.m. and after, make a pit stop at the Harvey Harper Car Museum to join Humboldt County Historical Society for wine, beer, finger foods and a tour and open house from 4 to 7 p.m. ($30 per couple, $15 individual). (Fund) Raised in a Barn

Make hay to the barn party in Bayside — Barn-tini! Friday, Sept. 7 from 5:30 to 9 p.m. at Kokte Ranch and Nature Preserve ($35, $30 advance, includes food and one drink). This one's for the 21 and up crowd.

Raise money (and the roof!) at the fifth annual event that benefits local beloved organizations. The end of summer soiree helps further the missions of Jacoby Creek Land Trust, Humboldt Wildlife Care Center and Bird Ally X. It's an evening of Martinis in the barn, featuring a deluxe taco bar by Brett Shuler Fine Catering, live music by The Absynth Trio, Dominic Romano and Morgan Corviday. The cocktails are made with locally produced spirits from Dutch and Dewey Distillery. Play a little bocce, chat with friends around the fire pit or take a walk down by the creek. All in all, it's a fine way to say goodbye to summer and help preserve the lands and wildlife we cherish here on the North Coast.

Flesh and Fury

A Prayer Before Dawn

By Gabrielle Gopinath

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

A PRAYER BEFORE DAWN. I left A Prayer Before Dawn feeling like I'd been beaten to a pulp in a Thai prison, but I mean that as a compliment.

Jean-Stéphane Sauvaire's 2017 drama, written by Jonathan Hirschbein and Nick Saltrese, and starring Joe Cole, is based on a memoir by Billy Moore, a Liverpoolian boxer and addict who served three years in Bangkok's notorious Klong Prem prison after getting busted for drugs and guns.

Klong Prem is a sweltering hellscape where general population prisoners sleep packed like sardines on the concrete floor. Might makes right here, and the law of the jungle holds sway. Trips to the latrine incite unprovoked assaults of shocking violence and a harrowing gang rape staged for the new inmate's benefit had one moviegoer walking out the night I saw the film.

When Moore's punishing performance in bareknuckle prison brawls draws the attention of scouts for the Klong Prem boxing team, he trains in Muay Thai kickboxing, makes it onto the team and fights in the inter-prison league. Another director might have bent this raw material into a redemptive arc but there's no room for sentiment among the packed bodies in Sauvaire's shots.

This film is about flesh in motion. Cinematographer David Ungaro fills the screen with thighs, torsos and biceps, slick with sweat or spattered with blood. Bodies overlap in this claustrophobic, sweltering world without privacy. In the lulls between outbreaks of violence, inmates slap one another on the back, wrap arms around waists and lay hands on one another to administer tattoos or massage.

Fight scenes fast-forward the parade of flesh into a visceral, impressionistic blur. The camera feints and lunges alongside Cole, and circles his masklike face at quieter moments as though seeking to breach the character's reserve.

We first see Moore from behind, seated in one corner of a Bangkok boxing ring, a wedge of muscle thrust forward from the waist, his cue-ball head hunched below his beefy shoulders like an afterthought. He's a body moving in the present tense, responding to fear, need, desperation and aggression. Cole delivers a dazzlingly physical performance, making you believe in the skills that spell survival for his character in prison: inscrutable reserve and propensity for extreme violence.

Sauvaire has given his protagonist no backstory. Even when Moore's father visits him in prison, the scene is played without dialogue — the father is played by the real Moore, gazing impassively at Cole as his younger self, giving nothing away.

Instead, entree into Moore's psyche is provided by the soundtrack, masterfully designed by Foley artist Nicolas Becker (Gravity, Enter the Void). Becker crafts an engrossing soundscape that intersperses Southeast Asian-style percussion ensembles, Buddhist chants and electronic drone. These coincide with Moore's intermittent escapes from consciousness via snatches of sleep, concussion or solitary confinement. These are experienced by him — and us — as moments of relief from rage, frustration, claustrophobia and fear.

The moments of inarticulate grace Moore shares with ladyboy inmate Fame, played with regal self-possession by Pornchanok Mabklang, are played so close to the vest that dialogue would seem superfluous. When Moore makes the kickboxing team and his new teammates give him a tattoo, this silent initiation rite becomes near-transcendent; almost imperceptibly, a gathering of murderous thugs morphs into a laying on of hands. The director seems to intimate that this skin-on-skin connection is the stuff of which brotherhood is forged.

Exploring the toxicity of violence in highly regimented, all-male environments is nothing new for Sauvaire: His previous feature Johnny Mad Dog, about child soldiers in the Liberian civil war, starred former child soldiers, and this production is likewise characterized by a powerful sense of verisimilitude. Sauvaire filmed in a deserted Thai prison; Cole reportedly trained in Muay Thai boxing for the role and, in the film's visceral close-up views of fighting and training, it shows. *R. 116M. Excellent Simulations

Suppose this whole mess is just a simulation? Wildfires, Trump, Mars rovers, vaping, dreams, sex, God, you, me, everything — all a digital creation of some far-in-the-future kid playing with her Xbox. You know what teens are like; they get bored easily and destroy what they've made before starting over. Max Tegmark, the Swedish-American cosmologist, recommends — I think tongue-in-cheek, it's hard to know with him — that we all go out and do interesting things with our lives so that our creator is too engrossed by our activities to switch us off.

You're probably familiar with the "everything's a simulation" argument ("Reality Check," April 28, 2011), the idea that virtual worlds would be far easier to create than actual ones. In the 1970s, the best-selling video game Pong consisted of two lines and a dot. Now 40 years on, you can experience a near-seamless, virtual-reality 3D fantasy world where you can fight dragons or aliens, learn how to fly or flirt with digital beings of whatever sexual orientation appeals. Fast forward a couple of hundred years or so and it'll be horny teens creating entire worlds just like the one we seem to be living in.

Just like? Here's the nub of the argument that we're more likely living inside a gigantic simulated universe than a "real" one: Real universes take a lot of energy to create, while — in the not-so-distant future — simulated ones will be programmed as easily as a SimCity game is today. Future versions of VR will surely have computational agents — people — that seem to be conscious. There will be no need for actual black holes, galaxies, planets, life — it will all be simulated in the hearts of computer chips with barely any expenditure of energy. Based on such arguments, Elon Musk asserted a couple of years ago that "the odds are a billion to one" against us living in what he called "base reality."

If the zeroes and ones of a computer memory approach doesn't appeal to you, try this idea from Alan Guth, father of "inflation" following the Big Bang (which explains, perhaps, some curious aspects of our universe). Guth suggests that this cosmos could be a lab experiment spawned from an artificial Big Bang created by super-intelligent beings. In this case, all the matter and energy of the universe (our universe) is real, we're real, everything's real, the 14-billion-year outcome of intelligent beings running a "Hey, let's see what happens!" scenario, the way a biologist today might create a culture of evolving micro-organisms in the lab.

None of this is really new. Plato's cave (in which chained prisoners perceived shadows on the wall of a cave as reality) anticipated The Matrix by 2,000 years. Three hundred years ago, philosopher George Berkeley convinced himself, with impeccable logic, that the world is an illusion. But that's not to say that Plato or Berkeley went around in a stoned cloud of unreality any more than Elon Musk (presumably) treats his family and colleagues as artificial constructs.

Convince yourself it's all a simulation and what changes? Nothing, of course. Whether we're brains in vats, dreams in the mind of God, or zeroes and ones "living" on a sophisticated computer chip, life — the life we experience — goes on. What to do? In the immortal words of Keanu Reeves' Ted, "Party on, dudes!" ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) thinks it's all an excellent adventure, real or not.

PROPERTY TAX DEFAULT (DELINQUENT) LIST

I, John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify that:

The real properties listed below were declared to be in tax default at 12:01 a.m. on July 1, 2015, by operation of law pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code §3436. The declaration of default was due to nonpayment of the total amount due for the taxes, assessments, and other charges levied in fiscal year 2014 -2015 that were a lien on the listed real property.

Tax-defaulted real property may be redeemed by payment of all unpaid taxes and assessments, together with the additional penalties and fees, as prescribed by law, or it may be redeemed under an installment plan of redemption.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of September 2018, is shown opposite the parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

All information concerning redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew 825 5th St Room 125 Eureka, CA 95501. (707) 476-2450.

PARCEL NUMBERING SYSTEM EXPLANATION

The Assessor's Parcel Number (APN), when used to describe property in this list, refers to the assessor's map book, the map page, the block on the map (if applicable), and the individual parcel on the map page or in the block. The assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the assessor's office.

Property tax defaulted on July 1, 2015, for the taxes, assessments and other charges for the fiscal year 2014-2015.

Tax-defaulted real property may be redeemed by payment of all unpaid taxes and assessments, together with the additional penalties and fees, as prescribed by law, or it may be redeemed under an installment plan of redemption.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of September 2018, is shown opposite the parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

All information concerning redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew 825 5th St Room 125 Eureka, CA 95501. (707) 476-2450.

If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. Koch In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that Eddie C. Koch be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. Astrology

Free Will Astrology

Week of Sept. 6, 2018

By Rob Brezсны
freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Now is an excellent time to feel and explore and understand and even appreciate your sadness. To get you in the mood, here's a list of sadnesses from novelist Jonathan Safran Foer: sadness of the could-have-been; sadness of being misunderstood; sadness of having too many options; sadness of being smart; sadness of awkward conversations; sadness of feeling the need to create beautiful things; sadness of going unnoticed; sadness of domesticated birds; sadness of arousal being an unordinary physical state; sadness of wanting sadness.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do you have any feral qualities lurking deep down inside you? Have you ever felt a mad yearning to communicate using howls and yips instead of words? When you're alone, do you sometimes dispense with your utensils and scoop the food off your plate with your fingers? Have you dreamed of running through a damp meadow under the full moon for the sheer ecstasy of it? Do you on occasion experience such strong erotic urges that you feel like you could weave your body and soul together with the color green or the sound of a rain-soaked river or the moon rising over the hills? I ask these questions, Taurus, because now is an excellent time to draw on the instinctual wisdom of your feral qualities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "Close some doors today," writes novelist Paulo Coelho. "Not because of pride, incapacity, or arrogance, but simply because they lead you nowhere." I endorse his advice for your use, Gemini. In my astrological opinion, you'll be wise to practice the rough but fine art of saying NO. It's time for you to make crisp decisions about where you belong and where you don't; about where your future fulfillment is likely to thrive and where it won't; about which relationships deserve your sage intimacy and which tend to push you in the direction of mediocrity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): To casual observers you may seem to be an amorphous hodgepodge, or a simmering mess of semi-interesting confusion, or an amiable dabbler headed in too many directions at once. But in my opinion, casual observers would be wrong in that assessment. What's closer to the symbolic truth about you is an image described by poet Carolyn Forché: grapes that are ripening in the fog. Here's another image that resonates with your current state: sea turtle eggs gestating beneath the sand on a misty ocean beach. One further metaphor for you: the bright yellow flowers of the evening primrose plant, which only bloom at night.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): I want to make sure that the groove you're in doesn't devolve into a rut. So I'll ask you unexpected questions to spur your imagination in unpredictable directions. Ready? 1. How would you describe the untapped riches in the shadowy part of your personality? 2. Is there a rare object you'd like to own because it would foster your feeling that the world has magic and miracles? 3. Imagine the perfect party you'd love to attend and how it might change your life for the better. 4. What bird most reminds you of yourself? 5. What's your most evocative and inspiring taboo daydream? 6. In your past, were there ever experiences that made you cry for joy in ways that felt almost orgasmic? How might you attract or induce a catharsis like that sometime soon?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): By volume, the Amazon is the largest river in the world. But where does it originate? Scientists have squabbled about that issue for over 300 years. Everyone agrees the source is in southwestern Peru. But is it the Apurímac River? The Marañón? The Mantaro? There are good arguments in favor of each. Let's use this question as a poetic subtext as we wonder and meditate about the origin of your life force, Virgo. As is the case for the Amazon, your source has long been mysterious. But I suspect that's going to change during the next 14 months. And the clarification process begins soon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): When Warsan Shire was a child, she immigrated to the UK with her Somalian parents. Now she's a renowned poet who writes vividly about refugees, immigrants, and other marginalized people. To provide support and inspiration for the part of you that feels like an exile or fugitive or displaced person, and in accordance with current astrological omens, I offer you two quotes by Shire. 1. "I belong deeply to myself." 2. "Document the moments you feel most in love with yourself — what you're wearing, who you're around, what you're doing. Recreate and repeat."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "Once in a while came a moment when everything seemed to have something to say to you." So says a character in Alice Munro's short story "Jakarta." Now I'm using that message as the key theme of your horoscope. Why? Because you're at the peak of your ability to be reached, to be touched, to be communicated with. You're willing to be keenly receptive. You're strong enough to be deeply influenced. Is it because you're so firmly anchored in your understanding and acceptance of who you are?

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): In 1928, novelist Virginia Woolf wrote a letter to her friend Saxon Sidney Turner. "I am reading six books at once, the only way of reading," she confided, "since one book is only a single unaccompanied note, and to get the full sound, one needs ten others at the same time." My usual inclination is to counsel you Sagittarians to focus on one or two important matters rather than on a multitude of semi-important matters. But in accordance with current astrological omens, I'm departing from tradition to suggest you adopt Woolf's approach to books as your approach to everything. Your life in the coming weeks should be less like an acoustic ballad and more like a symphony for 35 instruments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Not many goats can climb trees, but there are daredevils in Morocco that do. They go in quest of the delicious olive-like berries that grow on argan trees. The branches on which they perch may be 30 feet off the ground. I'm naming them as your power creature for the coming weeks. I think you're ready to ascend higher in search of goodies. You have the soulful agility necessary to transcend your previous level of accomplishment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): From 49-45 BC, civil war wracked the Roman Republic. Julius Caesar led forces representing the common people against armies fighting for the aristocracy's interests. In 45 BC, Caesar brought a contingent of soldiers to Roman territory in North Africa, intent on launching a campaign against the enemy. As the general disembarked from his ship, he accidentally slipped and fell. Thinking fast, he exclaimed, "Africa, I have tight told of you!" and clasped the ground, thus implying he had lowered himself on purpose in a ritual gesture of conquest. In this way, he converted an apparent bad omen into a positive one. And indeed, he won the ensuing battle, which was the turning point that led to ultimate victory and the war's end. That's good role modeling for you right now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Below are sweet words I've borrowed from poets I love. I invite you to use them to communicate with anyone who is primed to become more lyrically intimate with you. The time is right for you to reach out! 1. "You look like a sea of gems." —Qahar Aasi 2. "I love you with what in me is unfinished." —Robert Bly 3. "Yours is the light by which my spirit's born." —E. E. Cummings 4. "Tell me the most exquisite truths you know." —Barry Hannah 5. "It's very rare to know you, very strange and wonderful." —F. Scott Fitzgerald 6. "When you smile like that you are as beautiful as all my secrets." —Anne Carson 7. Everything you say is "like a secret voice speaking straight out of my own bones." — Sylvia Plath
